
Where's the freedom?

Re: Fluoride-fighters should be saving us from oh so many other things — Nov 30.

Heidi Engelhardt speaks of the additives in products such as milk, table salt and flour that have beneficial results. Excellent. But I don't agree. So now what do we do?

Do we allow companies to sell both types of products with and without the additives. This would allow us to decide what is good for us into our bodies. We could each make an informed decision that is right for us.

Or, do we not allow a choice and allow the majority to decide to force additives into our food and water that we may or may not want. No informed decision would be allowed. Things have been decided for you.

I expect freedom of choice in regard to what chemicals I put into my body. So be as sarcastic as you want, but the laws that force certain chemicals (mostly poor substitutes for naturally occurring nutrients) into our food is a serious issue. If these laws were truly in the right, why do we not have a law forcing every citizen of this great country to take a multivitamin supplement pill every morning?

Let's either fully decide what is right for every citizen, or let's let every citizen fully decide what's right for themselves.

Akos Horvath

Kitchener